

lying flat

Now the young people in China have completely realized the reality.

They no longer want to work hard, but they don't have high wages, can't afford a house, can't get married.

A few decades ago, young people in China worked hard. At that time, the state would allocate housing, or four or five years' wages could buy a house.

Now it may take 30 years or more to make enough money to buy a house.

If they can't buy a house before 2008 and 2016, it may be difficult for them to afford the house they want in their whole life.

In China, the house represents medical care, pension, children's education and so on.

And now Chinese women always want to see themselves as a privileged group.

So today's young people don't want to work hard, don't want to get married, don't want to raise children, don't want to follow the path arranged by others.

They chose to lie flat.

Just like the otaku in Japan, he is no longer interested in anything.

They also work, but no longer use their lives to make money. They also fall in love, but they hardly talk about marriage, or after marriage, they don't want to have children.

People are worried, but there is no way.

China's future also faces many challenges.
